The Invisible String by Patrice Karst

Liza and Jeremy wake up scared and run to their mom. She tells them the story of the Invisible String, a very special string that connects us to everyone we love no matter how far away we are from them. The string even reaches all the way to heaven, and it doesn't go away, not even when we're angry. A beautiful story that helps parents and children talk about how they are always connected through love no matter what.

The Kissing Hand by Audrey Penn, Ruth E. Harper, and Nancy M. Leak

Chester raccoon is scared to go to school, but his mom tells him the story of the kissing hand. She puts a kiss on his hand and tells him "whenever you feel lonely and need a little loving from home, just press your hand to your cheek and think, 'Mommy loves you.' And that very kiss will jump to your face and fill you with toasty warm thoughts." Chester loves his kissing hand and he even offers mom a hand as he heads off to school. This book is a wonderful way to help children and parents feel connected and manage separations.

You Go Away by Dorothy Corey

This board book deals with a young child's fear that people will go away and not return. Using simple illustrations of diverse families (different ethnicities, fathers, mothers, and grandparents), this book shows how even though people go away, they usually come back. The book is especially good for toddlers with separation anxiety. It may also be helpful for children who have had people leave and not come back to help them learn that most people usually come back.

Little Monkey's One Safe Place by Richard Edwards

Little monkey is scared by the storm. Don't worry his mom tells him, "There is always one safe place." He searches all through the jungle for his one safe place and returns to his mother tired, scared, and sad because he could not find it. She shows him that his one safe place is with her, right in her arms. This book captures the idea of the safe base. Within the arms of a parent, a child can feel safe and protected from the storm.

The Runaway Bunny by Margaret Wise Brown

A little bunny tells his mother "I am running away." "If you run away" says his mother, "I will run after you for you are my little bunny." The bunny suggests different ways he might run away, and each time, his mother responds with how she will search for and be there for the little bunny. This board book tells the story of enduring love and connection. While it is a classic book for all toddlers, it may be especially useful for children who have experienced separations and those who need reassurance that their caregivers will always come after them.
